5.2.2 History		The National Recovery Administration (NRA) was established by Executive Order (E.O.) 6173, June 16, 1933, pursuant to the National Industrial Recovery Act (48 Stat. 195), June 16, 1933. The NRA was established to administer provisions of Title I of the National Industrial Recovery Act (NIRA) of 1933, specifically, to develop and administer an industrial code system that would exert controls over industrial pricing, production, trade practices, and labor relations, thereby promoting economic recovery. On May 27, 1935, the U.S. Supreme Court, in Schechter v. United States, held the mandatory codes section of NIRA unconstitutional, declaring that the code system was an unconstitutional delegation of legislative power and an unconstitutional attempt by the Federal Government to regulate interstate commerce. The remainder of Title I was extended until April 1, 1936, by joint resolution of Congress (49 Stat. 375), June 14, 1935, and NRA was reorganized by E.O. 7075, June 15, 1935, to facilitate its new role as a promoter of industrial cooperation and to enable it to produce a series of economic studies. The National Recovery Administration was abolished, effective January 1, 1936, by E.O. 7252, December 21, 1935, which assigned liquidation functions to the Department of Commerce.
